Science has proven that Bella Hadid is the most beautiful woman in the world

Not super shocking...

Well folks, in a not-so-shocking turn of events, science has proven that Bella Hadid is the most beautiful woman in the world.

It all boils down to the placement of her eyes, nose and lips - which does make sense.

The stunning 23-year-old model apparently fits into the Golden Ratio of Beauty Phi rule, which was calculated by ancient Greeks to quantify beauty.

What in the name of GOD is that, I hear you ask?

It's a mathematical formula that was used back in ancient times, but also used during the European Renaissance.

Artists and architects - including Leonardo Da Vinci - utilised the formula to create their iconic masterpieces.

So basically, Bella Hadid is a masterpiece, not that we didn't know that already.

So basically, Bella Hadid is a masterpiece, not that we didn't know that already.

Harley Street surgeon, Dr Julian De Silva, created the list by mapping the eyes, brows, nose, lips, jaw, chin and ears of a number of famous women.

"Bella Hadid was the clear winner when all elements of the face were measured for physical perfection," he said.

"She had the highest overall reading for her chin which, with a score of 99.7 percent, is only 0.3 percent away from being the perfect shape. Bella also came second behind Scarlett Johansson for the positioning of her eyes."

Bella won out over the likes of Beyonce , Amber Heard, Ariana Grande , and Cara Delevingne achieving a rating of 94.35 percent to the Golden Ratio.

Impressive.
