No, the most handsome man in the world cannot be named by science

In 2016, the same "study" had designated Amber Heard as the most beautiful woman in the world based on the "golden ratio".

SCIENCE - Robert Pattinson is the most beautiful man in the world according to plastic surgeon Julian de Silva. He would have gotten this answer through "science". But can we really know what a perfect face is by using a mathematical ratio ?

It is the Daily Mail which reports, this Tuesday, January 4, 2020, a ranking of the most beautiful men in the world including Robert Pattinson, Henri Cavill and Bradley Cooper. The surgeon analyzed the different portions of celebrities' faces before applying an equation based on the golden ratio, approximately 1.618. According to his logic, the closer you are to the number, the more beautiful you are and vice versa.
